The festivities will be in the Root Cellar (if you haven't been, it's a must see) with live music, and of course delicious hours d'oeuvres made by recognized Chef Daniel Orr. Price to be determined, fun will be a definite.

MEMBERS SEND THESE ANNOUNCEMENTS: (somewhat chronologically arranged)

From Member Barbara Carlson:

Sunday afternoon, August 3 at 3:30 p.m., First United Church (2420 e 3rd st.): voice recital by Betsy Urquart, former Miss Indiana who has done outstanding volunteer work for Middle Way House!

For those interested in Sustainability – This from member Amanda Shaw

The Bloomington branch of the US Green Building Council will sponsor a talk by Chris Smith, P.E., The Schneider Corporation, Monday, Aug. 4 at 6 p.m. at the Monroe Co. Public Library auditorium. Smith, formerly of Bloomington, will talk about his recent experience as team leader of EarthCREW, winner of the 2008 Crosland Sustainable Placemaking Design Challenge. The EarthCREW team, headed by Smith and made up of design professionals from seven firms as well as Bloomington artist and DWC member Joe LaMantia, won the competition with a highly creative holistic planning process for development and neighborhood design. The winning design included green concepts such as an art wall made of recycled steel that also doubles as a tank to hold 15,000 gallons of rainwater that can be later used for irrigation

WHY WOMEN SHOULD RULE THE WORLD by Dee Dee Myers, White House press secretary for Bill Clinton

TWO ARTICLES ON RECENT ISSUES OF IMPORTANCE TO WOMEN:

Some of us are old enough to remember.... Before the Pill.....

It seems as if the conservatives are determined to make birth control classified as an abortifacient, and with that move, make birth control pills and other birth control devices illegal. Yes, in our day and age.. How could this happen.... Read below:

This from the NARAL website:

A new attack on birth control
July 30, 2008 The Boston Globe

WITH JUST a few months left in office, President Bush is still doing the bidding of social conservatives who oppose women's reproductive freedoms. Under the guise of rules to protect antiabortion nurses and doctors from discrimination in hiring, a proposed new regulation would expand the definition of abortion to include any form of contraception that can work by stopping implantation of a fertilized egg in the uterus. This can include common birth-control pills, emergency contraception, and the intra-uterine device, or IUD. Doctors who refuse to perform abortions for reasons of personal conscience already are protected by law.

The potential impact of this new rule on the more than 500,000 hospitals, family planning clinics, and medical offices that receive any form of federal funding could be dramatic. The rule could also undercut many state laws - including one in Massachusetts requiring hospitals to provide emergency contraception for rape victims - and laws requiring prescription drug insurance plans to include contraceptives. Massachusetts passed such a law in 2002.

The draft proposed rule highlights the fact that many antiabortion groups also oppose one good method of preventing the unplanned pregnancies that lead to abortions - birth control. At some point in their lives, 98 percent of US women use birth control.

The proposed rule, while claiming to protect the rights of nurses and doctors, would interfere with patients' rights. A woman seeking treatment could be denied birth control and not even be aware that the service was available - only denied to her because of the unexpressed personal beliefs of the practitioner.

Last November, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists said gynecologists must provide "accurate and unbiased information" to patients and "have the duty to refer patients in a timely manner to other providers" if the doctors do not want to perform an abortion or prescribe birth control. The US secretary of health and human services, Michael Leavitt, said he thought this statement went too far in forcing doctors to choose between their beliefs and the prospect of professional sanctions.

The administration does not need approval of Congress to put this rule into effect. But about 100 members of the House, including all representatives from this state except Stephen Lynch of South Boston, have signed a letter protesting it. In the Senate, Patty Murray of Washington and Hillary Clinton of New York are leading the opposition. The administration should take heed and drop its ideological attack on contraception.

Julia Copeland sends this link to McCains position on Birth control. <http://www.alternet.org/reproductivejustice/92281>
It seems for more than 20 years John McCain has voted against contraception every time it came up.
